Walk back in time with Arizona's radio and television legends. This distinctive non-profit museum offers a compendium of personalities and paraphernalia from this dynamic broadcast industry, preserving for all time Arizona's beginnings, for generations to experience and treasure for years come.

The museum is located atop Scottsdale's Anthony's building, at 7150 East 5th Avenue amongst the prestigious 5th Avenue Shops is the House of Broadcasting, in space formerly occupied by country singer, Tanya Tucker. It is open Monday through Sunday from 10am to 6pm.

The House of Broadcasting is free to the public, made possible through sponsorships of Celebrity Roasts and Salutes, private donations and contributions, and the HOB! Annual Golf Tournament. The museum is available for group tours by special arrangement. Educational opportunities are encouraged.

As you walk up the staircase toward the multiple charming gallery rooms, you'll begin to experience those special sights and sounds of our past. From one of a kind photographs to awards, cameras, editing and lighting equipment, you'll find it all, under one roof to enjoy for a several moments or a few hours.

You're sure to enjoy the novelty items that abound, from historic KOY, KPHO and KTVK, to today's Newsradio 620 KTAR, KEZ, KISS and KUPD radio. Local personalities photos, correspondence, video tapes and soundbites plus other classic collectibles abound.

You're sure to enjoy the novelty items that Abound, from historic Arizona radio and television stations.

Step back in time to those classic shows like the Wallace & Ladmo children's show, a landmark show that ran for 37 years. Enjoy costuming and classic musical memorabilia including Buck Owens performance guitar and red suit and early news anchor attire from Mary Jo West, W. Steven Martin's red books and gems from the Frank Pollack, Tom Chauncey, former owner of Arizona CBS-TV affiliates, billboard mogul, Karl Eller and from Del & Jewell Lewis, former owners of Phoenix's first ABC-TV affiliate.
